

Dear FCC,

As an XM listener for over a year now, I have never been disappointed with my service. However, it has never replaced the radio in my car, but rather sits on my desk at home. I think a misconception that many people have is that XM is eliminating standard radio, when infact it suppliments it. Therefore, XM's local oriented channels do not out-compete my exposure to the local radio stations, and should be able to continue with that service. Also, these aren't "mom and pop" radio stations that think they are loosing money, but rather companies equal in size to that of XM and other satelite providers. Please take these points into concideration. Thank you.
